

#AskTwice- How are you going to ask the right questions?

SAFETY MOMENT

How are you?

When asking “How are you?”, 99% of the time—what is the response?

good

alright

fine

That’s why the question, “How are you?” is in need of a drastic makeover.

Often when you ask people “how are you?” for a second time, you receive a more authentic answer. People tend to feel like you ‘actually’ care and that you are willing to listen.

Let’s think about asking better questions, and showing genuine care
